OLDER AMERICANS ACT

Background

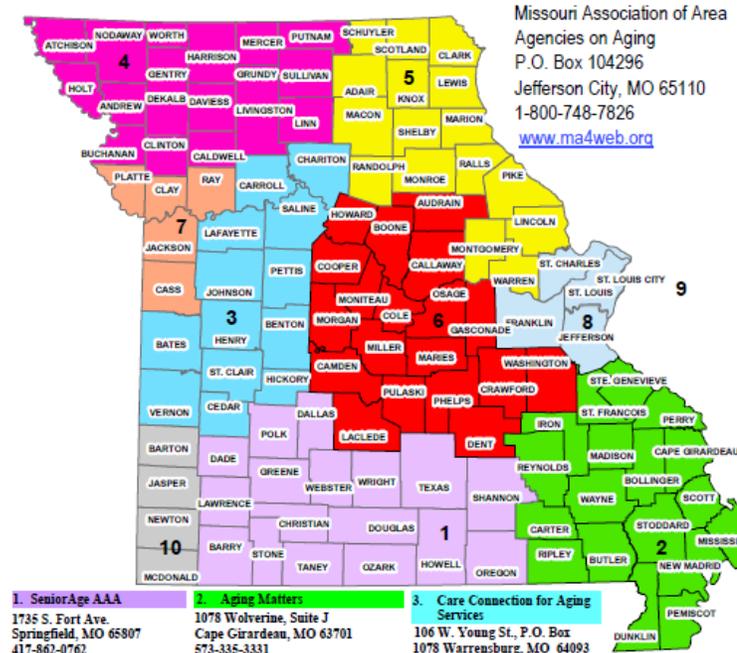

- The Older Americans Act (OAA) is a federal law, signed by President Lyndon Johnson in 1965, that promotes the well-being of older Americans, usually 60 years of age or older, through services and programs designed to meet the specific needs of older citizens.
- Most funding for the OAA is allocated to the Administration on Community Living to pass-thru to the U.S. States and territories.
- The Division of Senior and Disability Services (DSDS) is Missouri's designated State Unit on Aging and receives the pass-thru funding.
- DHSS then contracts with the 10 designated Area Agencies on Aging to provide programs and services to meet the unique needs of the individuals in their local planning and service areas.
